Six ridiculous spoofs of television shows, movies, and literary classics. There is a tale about obsession, in the style of Melville, Hemingway, but mostly Benchley. But it's low budget. Instead of an ocean or a sea, I've suggested a lake or pond. Instead of a white whale or white shark, I've suggested a carp. Obsessions should be achievable, right? There is a classic western story about the Notright cattle barons, a family so powerful that everybody fears them, as well they should; the whole clan is bat-crap crazy! A certain international spy has been recklessly seducing women for the past 50 plus years, and today that kind if behavior is unacceptable. In fact, the mothers of his myriad children are threatening to sue the British government for back child support payments, which would bankrupt the nation! Can James convince them to change their minds? What would happen if Hollywood got their hands on a great story about life on the plantation, about oppression and dignity? What if they wanted to make it a weekly series? They'd probably destroy it, that's what! I've crossed 'Roots' with 'Hogan's Heroes' to view the depths of Hollywood's depravity. Dustin Hoffman created a lot of great roles for the silver screen. In one long, rambling tale, I've mashed a lot of them together to tell the life story of a very interesting man. What if Steinbeck were commissioned to translate Cervantes? And what if he didn't know medieval Spanish? He might come up with "Of Mice and the Man of La Mancha."
